Abstract of the Talk

Machines have been instrumental in paving the way to easing doing things for humans. Most recent ones have been the computers and their usage in various areas of human activities. The quest for building machines capable of doing more stuff that humans do ( or cannot do) has led to a category of machines called robots. Over the years they have been advancing to help in factories. But, now those technologies, especially AI driven, are coming to everyday human life like robotic cars, robotic room cleaners etc. Further, we are seeing human-like robots called humanoids shaping up like Sofia, Optimus etc. The next decade will have a lot coming up. Let's explore this phenomenon of the rise of robots.
